

That's No Moon.

RUTGERS SASHP NEWSLETTER

Wednesday, December 6, 2017

Dear SASHP Students,

That time is upon us. You've felt it like that creeping dread that the small moon you're approaching isn't a small moon at all. It's a space station. Or in this case, that manageable workload you thought you'd have during finals week now faces you and it seems as indestructible as the Death Star. Don't worry though: just breath, aim, and let the Force flow through you. Do or do not, there is no try. Here are some events that might help.

Tomorrow night you can either come workout your body at the Zumba event sponsored by the SASHP Peer Mentors or expand your mind by coming to the screening of I Am Not Your Negro. See the work of your fellow Rutgers students at the Writer's House Winter Creativity Showcase and the Aresty Research Slam. If you're worried about caffeine consumption read Akhila's advice on consciously caffeinating at the SASHP Blog. And if you find the stress overwhelming, just think of Han Solo:

May the Force be with you,
Kim Peterman
Student Director of Honors Media

Honors Advising

Travel To Poland with the Honors Program

In connection with the spring course "Exile under Nazism and Communism" (01:563:270/510:263/01:360:292) Professor Nancy Sinkoff (Jewish Studies/History) will lead 15 students on a week-long global field experience, "A Tale of Two Uprisings," to Poland. Travel will take place May 11-19, 2018. More information and application are here.

Advising Tip of The Week

Even though it may feel like your finals, extracurriculars, and life might just be ganging up against you, there's a sure way to stay on top of things: to-do lists. List your tasks and break them down into steps and prioritize what you will do when. Then be sure to stick to it!
