Rain, Rain, Go Away
RUTGERS SASHP NEWSLETTER

Wednesdays, September 12, 2018

Dear SAS Honors Program Students,

In terms of weather, the first two weeks of classes have been off to a rocky start. Sure, we all pleaded for a break from the unbearable heat of summer, but this isn’t what we wanted. But you can always make the best of a bad situation. I take bad weather as a chance to stomp around in rain boots and listen to the calming sound of raindrops sliding off the roof during my morning lectures. If you’re feeling a little too cooped up during this inclement weather, here are some events to get you out and about.

Check out the Alexander Library Exhibit on Social Media and Archives. Attend the launch party for the Anthologist, an esteemed literary magazine run by and for Rutgers students. Satiate your curiosity for Chinese history and culture by attending the introductory meeting of the Rutgers Chinese Dance Troupe. Get yourself into a routine by working Yoga at the Yard into your Sunday mornings. Apply for the Aresty Research Program to show off your analytical skills. Stay up to date with the lives of other honors students by reading our most recent SASHP blog post.

Perhaps you just want to stay in bed and read a good book or catch up with your Netflix show. Whatever the rest of your week may hold, stay dry.

With warmest regards,
Julianna Rossano
Student Director of Honors Media

In this Newsletter
Campus Events p. 2-3
Exhibit on Social Media and Archives
Anthologist Launch Party
Rutgers Chinese Dance Troupe
Yoga at the Yard Opportunities p. 4
Aresty Research
SASHP Blog Post

I’ll Send You a Postcard
Tell your friends and family back home about what you’re up to here at Rutgers! Stop by the Rutgers Art Library on College Ave and fill out a postcard. They’ll mail it for you, too.
Alexander Library Exhibit: Social Media and Archives

Explore the relationship between new technology and historical archives at the Alexander Library exhibit: Social Media and Archives. Their new exhibit, in Gallery '50, displays the actual items highlighted on their social media. Follow along at @Rutgers_SCUA. Exhibit runs until Oct 1.

Anthologist Launch Party

What’s better than free food and poetry readings? The Anthologist, one of Rutgers' most popular literary magazines, will be hosting the launch party for the spring 2018 issue. Stop by for refreshments and readings. Feel free to bring your own work. Sept 12, 8:30 PM at 35 College Ave.
RCDT General Interest Meeting

Are you interested in learning about Chinese culture, history, and dance? Take the first step by attending the first general interest meeting of the Rutgers Chinese Dance Troupe. You'll be dancing in no time. Sept 14, 5 to 7 PM in multipurpose room A of the Livingston Campus gym.

Yoga at the Yard

De-stress at the Yard with a little weekly yoga. Mats are included, so all you have to bring is yourself. Check back here or @theyardru on Twitter or Facebook for weather related updates. Sunday mornings, 9:30 to 10:30 AM at the Yard until Oct 28.
Aresty Research
Show off your independent research project or thesis! The Aresty Research Center invites you to submit proposals for the Aresty Research Fellowship Program. In addition to receiving research support, recipients will participate in presentation and poster design workshops and share their research with the university community at Aresty’s Annual Undergraduate Research Symposium. Applications are due Oct 1 by 11:59 PM. For more information and to apply, visit https://aresty.rutgers.edu/programs/fellowships/research-funding

Read Our Latest Blog Post!
Have you ever believed in something strange and unusual, simply because you wanted to? You aren’t alone. Stay up to date with the lives of SASHP students and read Saad Mansuri’s reflections about a close encounter of the third kind on our blog. Visit rutgershonorsblog.wordpress.com.

Follow Us!

rutgershonorsblog.wordpress.com  @RUSASHP  @RutgersSASHP  SAS Honors  @RU_SASHP